Instructions:

Print on cardstock and laminate. Cut cards apart.

These cards can be used in two ways. With younger children who are not yet reading, an adult or older child can read the card and the child can answer. This type of oral command/response is very important to a child's language development.

With an older child who can read, they can read the card to themselves and then answer. Or two children can take turns reading them to each other and saying the answers to each other.

There are obviously many more similar activities that can be done in this style, so if kids like them, challenge them to think of their own cards which you or they can write down (index cards work great for this).

These cards are not meant to be used as a reading activity; in other words, unless the child is already a fluent reader, the adult or older child should read them. They do not use phonetic words. They are primarily an oral activity.
